Biochemical mechanism of estrogen action in the brain. Estrogens act in the brain in many ways including changes in gene expression, enzyme activity, and receptor number and affinity. The receptors are divided into two major classes, ERalpha and ERbeta, with tissue- and cell-specific patterns of expression. In addition to the nuclear estrogen receptors, the membrane-associated G-protein-coupled estrogen receptor (GPER), a novel receptor for estradiol (E2), is highly expressed in the brain. In primary neuronal cultures, the GPER acts as a non-genomic estrogen receptor that affects cellular processes such as calcium mobilization, exocytosis, and dendritic spine density. The biological effect of estrogens on behavior is apparently mediated by the ERbeta and GPER. Q: How can I get the output as "Value: 1454016768" in redis? I have created the following redis command which gets the number of records in one of the keys. SET $number_of_records:1454016768 EXEC sortcollection:$number_of_records I need to output the value. Can someone help me? A: You can do what you want with command's SRANGE or SSCAN to get the last N records. Examples here: A qualitative study of activities that help HIV-positive people get and keep their jobs.
